woman. The real meaning of this revival is the survival of Margaret Anglin. She is one of the few sellbred, well-trained actresses of which our stage can boast.

Even in a play given up largely to "society people" who talk far too cleverly to be true to life, Miss Anglin graduated from Harvard last year, was sounds a note that makes a genuine appeal. Instantly, in this scene, Miss Anglin makes a sincere appeal and clears the air of epigrams. Sae is theatric only at the end of the second act, when the boy has followed Lord Illingworth out of the room and she stands, grasping a chair, with her back to the audience. This attitude is so melodramatic that it robs the actress of the earlier simplicity she has shown. In every other respect Miss Anglin proves herself to be a most resourceful, sympathetic and intelligent actress. She makes one feel the heartbreak of mother-love as no other woman on our stage could.

> It is a pity that her final scene with the boy should be marred by having the American girl, who is in love with Gerald, take a seat in the hall and listen to the whole story that the mother tells her son. The presence of Hester is in such bad taste that it destroys the dramatic value of the vital talk between mother and son. As a producer, Miss Anglin might easily arrange this awkward matter so that the girl comes in just in time to catch last word or two instead of all that is said. It is rather absurd, too, that Mrs. Arbuthnot should repeat, with a single change, words of Lord Illingworth that she did not hear by explaining that the gloves left on the able are those of "a man of no im-portance," Why not take liberties with Wilde just as a matter of common sense, if nothing cles?

As for her acting, Miss Anglin is admirable. It is because she is so sure of herself, perhaps, that she has made Holbrook Blinn the star of her the ease and distinction necessary to the part of Lord Illingworth. Even with a chair for her support at the end of the second act, Miss Angin dominates the scene that should be carried off by Mr. Blinn.

A delightful performance of Lody Caroline Pontefract, who is forever reminding poor old Sir John of his muffler or his rubbers, is given by Marguerite St. John. George Le Geure acts the boy in such an appealing, ingenuous manner that he may easily be forgiven some of his Itching So Great Had to Tie Hands tricks of speech leave no more lasting impression than a rainbow.
